For any reason, the iPhone has many different voice recording programs, but very few of them do anything more than Apple's free Voice Memos app. We like just the Press Record because it manages to make itself worth its asking price by offering a different experience and feature set than Apple offerings. Just click on the Record Platform: iPhone (and iPad/Apple Watch/Mac) Price: $4.99 Download PageFeaturesOne-tap recording from the app, Notification Center or your home screenCloud backup and syncPower to share notes with any other program, supporting audio or text sharingText transcription for multiple languages with punctuation command supportNotes is a fully searched Mac application ($4.99) for desktop synchronization Unlimited recording time as long as your device allows SaveBackground, if you switch to another program, multifunctional support for iPadWhere it Excels as the name suggests when you open Just Press Record, you are displayed a large record button. Press that button and the program will start recording. It's simple, fast and simple, and that's what you want. In addition, Just Press Record does everything it can to simplify the audio memory recording process. This means that you can immediately start recording the memory from the lock screen using a control in the notification center, hard pressing the icon from the home screen, directly from the Apple Watch. Just Press Record is also the only option that includes transcription software, and while it's about as accurate as voice dictation on Siri, it's still a welcome addition. If you're one person clearly talking into the iPhone microphone, Just Press Record does a solid job during transcription, but if you're trying to record a group of people, it's confusing. Transcription is not only useful for text translation, but also allows you to search voice clips the way you would in Word Alone it is worth the price if you do a lot of voice memos and have no interest manually Then. G/O Media can get a commission68% discount on 2 years + 3 months FreeWhere It Falls ShortThe only feature just click record missing compared to other options is editing features. Depending on why you use voice recording software, this can be a transaction breaker, but if you just need a way to quickly record memos or record lectures, you don't usually need to edit. Just click Record also thinks you want to search through transcripts to find what you're looking for and doesn't offer much organizational way other than putting files to specific folders. This may be a deal breaker for anyone who expects to manage files in some way. At $5, the Just Press Record is expensive, but transcriptions allow you to be worth the entry price. CompetitionWhile there is a ton of voice recording programs, most of them do not offer much more than Apple's voice memories (free) app. In fact, voice memories are perfect for most people. With it, you can quickly save memos, crop them with an easy editor, and catalog them no matter how you see it. If that's all you need to do, the free app that is already on your phone is a lot. Voice Recorder (free /$1.99) is easily the most popular third-party voice recording option in the App Store and is a robust app for anyone looking for some updated version of voice memories. It offers basics including unlimited recording time, basic editing and the ability to loop sound. It also has several strong organizational options, including organizing records into the traditional folder structure. You can also back up your records to various cloud services or password-protected memos. If you don't like just press record transcription and search, but you still need something more than voice memory, voice recorder is a solid space that also adds some great organizational tools. If you don't need a special voice recorder, Evernote (free) and OneNote (free) have voice recording options where you can add a voice clip to any note. This is great for students who are recording lectures, or you record meeting notes. The process of both recording is a little buried, so if you're not already using any program for notes, they're not worth just audio memos. Alone.
